Honorable Ronald W. Reagan
President of the United States
The White House
Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Mr. President:

It is my opinion that our current policy toward classifying overhead photography of Soviet military activity is impairing our ability to win the popular support of some NATO nations for increases in their defense budgets.

The task of winning such support without the benefit of publicly distributed evidence of Soviet activity is particularly difficult in those nations led by coalition governments. In such nations, asking the public to accept "on faith" the existence of a growing menace to their security, is an act of extraordinary political naivete.

The traditional reason for not releasing this information has been that we don't want the Soviets to know what intelligence gathering capabilities we possess. I think that notion is becoming somewhat dated. Enough of this information has been released, whether intentionally or not, that the Soviets have a pretty fair understanding of our basic capabilities. Why we continue to withhold additional information to the detriment of our efforts to strengthen NATO, is beyond me.

I would be grateful if you would conduct a review of our current policies toward classifying and declassifying this information. I encourage you to make whatever modifications in those policies may be necessary, consistent with legitimate concerns for national security, to make this information available to the public.

With best wishes,

Barry Goldwater
Chairman
